

Sensitizing society about adoption

CS Jain, Ranikhet

Every child on this earth has the right to life and love. The society has to acknowledge this. Adoption then would be seen as a need of the child being adopted, equally as the need of the adoptive parent(s). This thinking has to be spread widely in the public and religious leaders, government officials, teachers and social activists can play a crucial role in this.

They not only need to be aware and sensitize themselves on adoption, but also help create far greater awareness on adoption. We faced quite a challenge getting accurate information on adoption. Most of our information came through books and magazines.

Immediate family has a large role in enabling adoption and a positive family environment can significantly reduce the transition challenges.

Overall, it has been a very ennobling and emotionally satisfying experience.
